Intouchables

Showing at Mapua's famous "Packhouse Cinema"

This award-winning French drama INTOUCHABLES is about a rich, white Parisian quadriplegic who hires a black ex-convict as his live-in personal assistant.

Loosely based on a true story, the film follows what happens when paralyzed aristocrat Philippe (Francois Cluzet) gives a down-and-out petty criminal Driss (Omar Sy) a chance to be his health aide, even though there were many better qualified applicants.

At first Driss is skeptical and disgusted by some of his responsibilities (like bathroom duty) but soon the two very different men come to understand, respect and help each other above and beyond the usual employer-employee relationships.

The Intouchables is a fantastically acted, surprisingly funny film. It's obvious what Driss derives from being Philippe's aide (a steady income, a fabulous, beautiful place to live, and other luxuries that being part of Philippe's household staff offers). But it's equally obvious how Philippe also benefits from the relationship: He gains a sense of spontaneity, a lust for life, and a companion without pity.

No wonder France selected this movie as its 2012 submission to the Academy Awards for best foreign language film.
