New look mobile safety cameras coming soon

7 May 2025

Kia ora

NZ Transport Agency Waka Kotahi (NZTA) will soon start operating mobile safety cameras. These look different to the vans NZ Police used.

Speeding drivers in New Zealand will now be detected by cameras in SUVs. Later this year we'll add trailers to the fleet.

We want people to have the opportunity to do the right thing so we're sharing information on what our vehicles look like.

What we need from you

Please drive to the speed limit and share that message with your people.

We've developed a factsheet you can share showing what our vehicles look like. You can find this here

What to expect

Our first SUV will be on the roadside in Auckland from mid-May. It'll be joined in the coming months by other SUV models (and colours) and trailers as NZTA expands its mobile camera operations across the country.

Like NZ Police, our SUVs and trailers will be unmarked. They also won't be hidden. They'll be visible to drivers.

Mobile safety cameras reduce deaths and serious injuries when they discourage speeding everywhere. We call this 'general deterrence' and that's why we deploy them nationwide 'anytime, anywhere'.

How frequently we visit, the length of time we stay and the time we visit a particular location is informed by data and local insights.

Where there is a risk of people being killed or seriously injured in a crash you can expect to see our SUVs and trailers.

From 1 July NZTA will be responsible for all safety cameras and NZ Police will no longer operate their mobile safety camera vans.

Police officers will continue to issue notices for the offences they detect.

Neither NZTA or our mobile camera operator (Acusenus) will receive any incentives or funds from tickets issued. Safety camera infringement fees go into the Government Consolidated Fund.
